Design pack 1

Five design calls from the 21 October photo sweep, each shown as live today (before) and as proposed (after), rendered from the live site in headless Chrome with the proposed CSS or image injected. Nothing on the site has been changed.

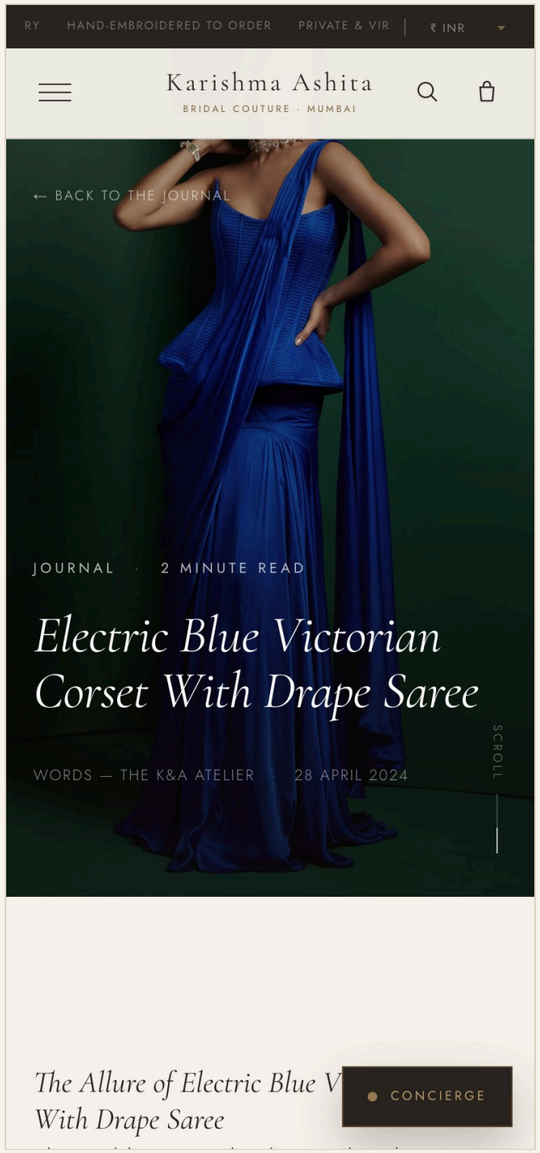

1	Journal article heroes on phones: start the image below the header (all 8 posts, 390x844 and 390x660)
2	Product page main image: cap the stage so the full figure fits the first screen (3 products, 1470x771 and 1440x900)
3	Journal index masthead: replace the faceless back view with first-love-hero.jpg
4	Homepage hero on phones: copy moves down, paragraph retires on phones, crop opens above the text
5	Final intro copy for Signature Top Sellers and Anarkalis (replaces live placeholder text)

Chrome renders only. Safari at 1470x771 and iPhone still to be checked by Suraj before sign-off (items 1 and 2 use calc/aspect-ratio).

Journal heroes on phones: the bride gets her head back

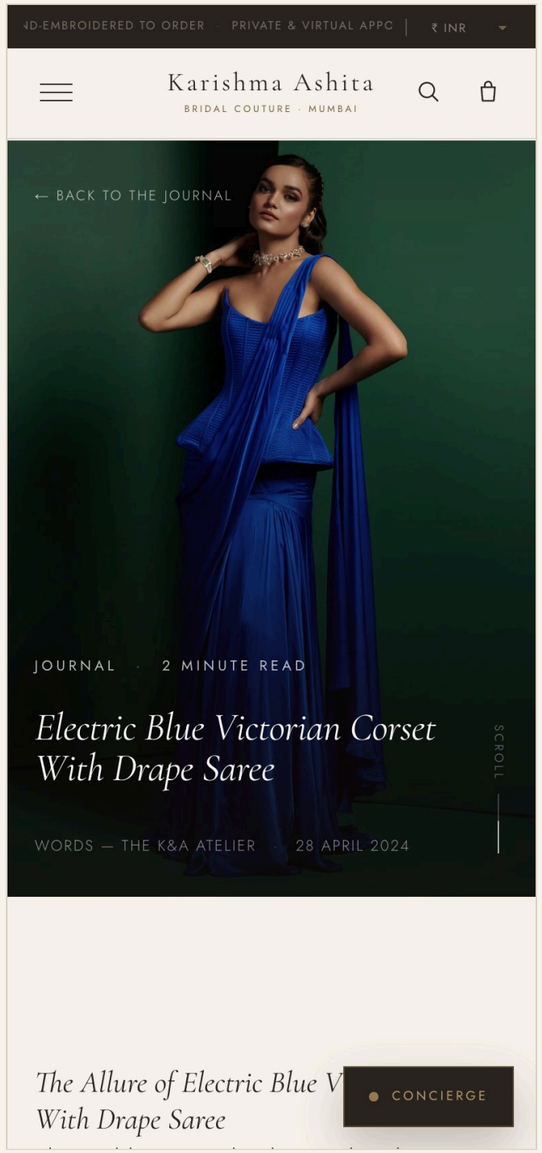

Why: the hero is a full-height portrait fit under a fixed header of about 100px (announcement bar plus nav), so 7 of 8 brides lose the top of the frame and no focal value can recover it. Fix: on phones the image starts where the header ends, and the hero grows by the header height so the photograph keeps its full 78svh. The header area behind the nav is ivory, so there is no seam. The title is set smaller with a deeper foot gradient so it sits on the skirt, not the bodice.

Result: face and outfit together on every one of the eight posts. The first screen on a 390x844 phone now shows the full-height image and the beginning of the article body.

AFTER (proposed)

At 390x660 the dek line retires so the title and byline stay below the bodice; all eight faces remain clear. The "Back to the Journal" link shortens to "Journal" on phones so it no longer crosses the head.

ITEM 2 OF 5 · MANI

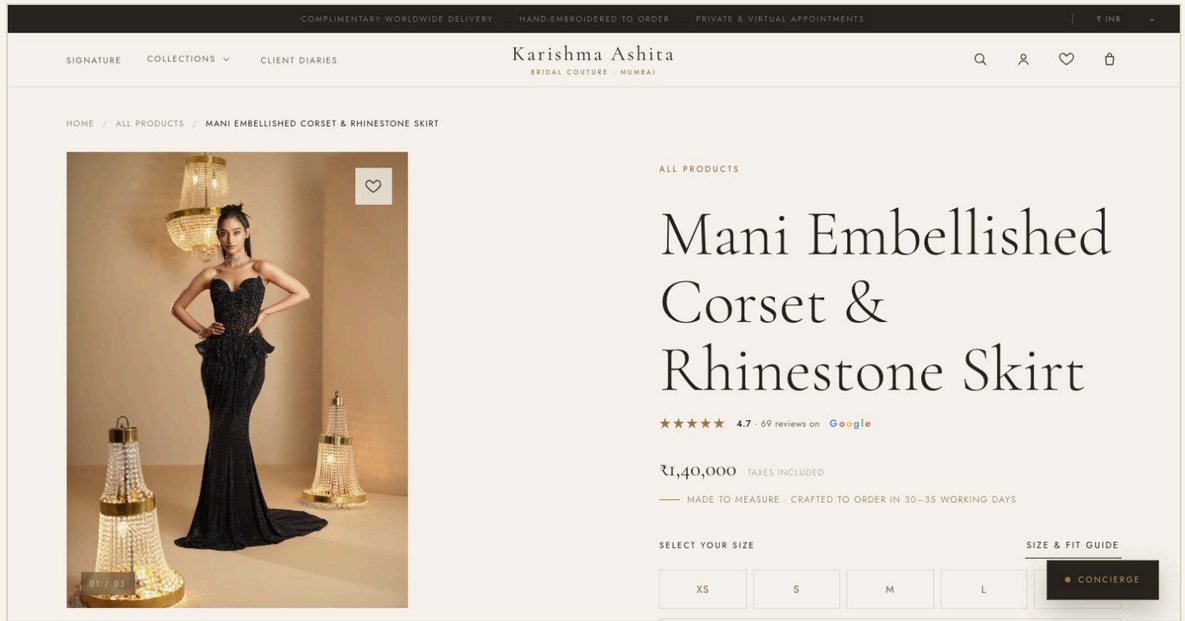

Product main image: the whole figure above the fold

Recommendation: cap it. Today the stage runs 694px tall from y=184, so the hem and feet fall below a 771px screen (15% hidden; 12% at 1440x900). Capped stage: 571px at 1470x771 (width 421px, down from 511px), 700px at 1440x900. A bride sees face, outfit and hem in one glance, which is the point of a couture photograph.

ITEM 2 OF 5 · DECISION

Cap the stage, keep it left-aligned

Decision	Cap. Luxury is the whole garment seen at once; a head-to-toe studio photograph with its hem cut off reads as a crop, not a couture frame. Suraj's standing rule (product photos head-to-toe, tight) is only true on screen if the hem is on screen.
Cost	The image is about 18% narrower on a 1470 screen (511px to 421px). The gap to the title column widens, but the page stays calm and spacious, which suits the house. Not a downgrade in resolution: the source files are larger than either size.
Rule	Stage height = the lesser of 90vh and (100svh minus 200px); width follows the photograph's own ratio; never smaller than 440px wide. At 1920x1080 it resolves to about 880px (no visible change from today beyond about 8%).
Mobile	Not changed here. On 390x660 the sticky Appointment/Concierge bar still covers 15-19% of the hem; that belongs to the mobile PDP spec (Docs/product-page-mobile-build-spec-2026-10-21.md), where the bar can be made to collapse once the image is in view.
Optional next	Tighten the breadcrumb-to-image gap (image starts at y=184 on a 99px header) by about 20px to buy back about 5% height. Not required for the cap.

Safari: this uses the same aspect-ratio plus calc family as the 19 October Safari grid bug, so the stage must be checked at 1470x771 in Safari before release.

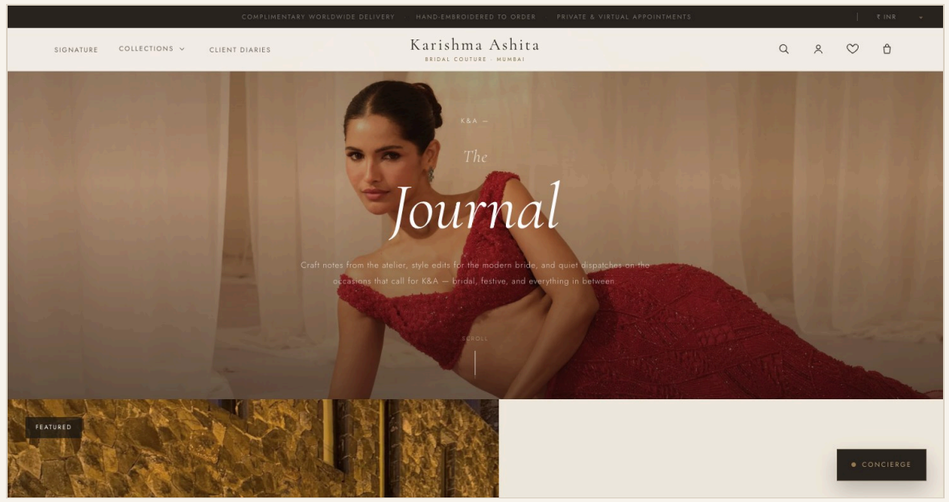

Journal index masthead: a face, a figure, a feeling

Before: bloom-soiree-main.jpg, a back view with the head out of frame (the template falls back to it because no image is set). After: first-love-hero.jpg (K&A's own, 1800x1350, landscape) the only landscape frame among the theme's editorial images. At 2.4:1 a portrait source can show only a third of a figure; this 4:3 original shows face, the full beaded blouse and the line of the skirt, with the focus set to 50% 6% so the head clears the header. Her face sits left of the title; the title crosses the blouse and the scrim keeps it legible. The same image already heads the First Love collection page; it is the strongest wide frame we own, and the repeat is deliberate (the Journal opens in the same warm ivory-and-red register as the collection a bride is most likely to have just seen).

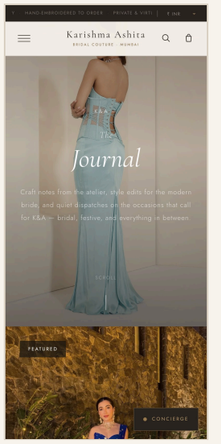

BEFORE · 1470X771

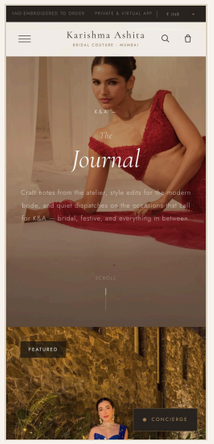

AFTER · FOCUS 50% 6%

AFTER · 30% 6%

Exact asset: first-love-hero.jpg (theme asset, https://karishmaashita.com/cdn/shop/t/14/assets/first-love-hero.jpg?v=77327054911815621631783250817). Prefer uploading it to Files and choosing it in the masthead's image picker; the theme path above changes with each theme version.

ITEM 4 OF 5

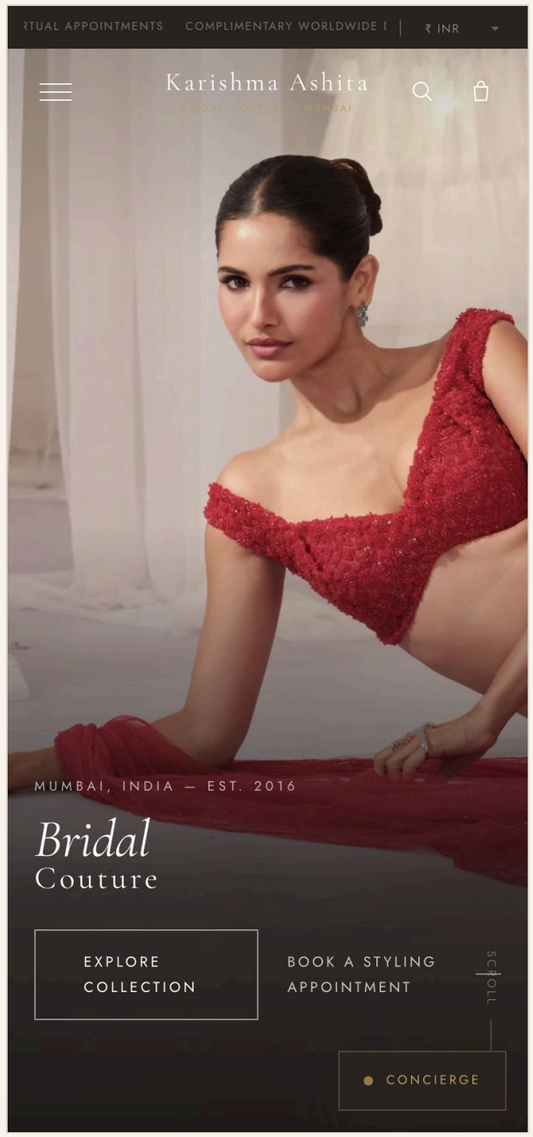

Homepage hero on phones: the garment first, then the words

Before: the three-line paragraph and the title sit on the bodice and skirt; at 390x660 the garment is mostly under type. After (phones only, desktop unchanged): the supporting paragraph retires on phones (it is repeated further down and in the meta description), the title steps from 57.6px to 40px, the copy block drops to 84px from the bottom, the image focus moves to 34% 8% so the face and the full beaded blouse sit in the clear upper 55%, and the gradient is held transparent until the title, then deepens to ink behind the buttons.
